INTRODUCTION.

In July, 1908, there was published under the auspices of Vassar Brothers' Institute the First Book of the Supervisors and Assessors of the County of Dutchess. The quaint spelling of the records in this little volume and some of the records themselves attracted considerable attention. The book was published for the purpose of preserving these records with the thought that there was much in them of local interest and some things of more than local interest. The present publication takes up the next book of the series. Like its predecessor this in its original form is an unbound, time-stained manuscript pamphlet. In most respects it is well preserved, but there are parts of it where the deciphering of the manuscript is difficult and in a few places, indicated by dashes in this publication, the words were not legible.

This volume is not so distinctly a book of records of the supervisors and assessors as its predecessor and contains many more miscellaneous records. The assessment lists extend to 1729, and the election records to 1732, but the miscellaneous records extend some ten years later and cover a period when the growth of the county had begun to make itself felt. The three divisions, or wards, into which the county was divided originally had given place in 1737 to seven precincts, or townships, under authority of an act passed by the Colonial Legislature. Evidence is to be found in this volume of the spread of population back from the river into the densely wooded interior and also of immigration to the county across the border from Connecticut. Among the miscellaneous records in the last part of the volume are a number of road surveys and these include the laying out of roads entirely across the county to Dover (page 162). It is interesting to note that the big hill just as the road enters Dover was called Plymouth Hill as early as 1736.

There are many interesting little bits that throw light upon the life of the times. We note, for instance, on page 17, a reference to "damage in wheate" in the middle ward, which shows that wheat was raised in the County of Dutchess at that time. Among the records of expenses such items as the following (page 22) are not infrequent: "To Leonard Lewis, Esq., for Beer & Rum for ye Assessors & Supervisors." We find also that book-keeping was not exactly a science in those days and that allowances for services were often much delayed, as for instance the payment to Hermanes Reynders "as Cryer in ye Cercut Cort several years agoe." On page 139 is strong evidence of the difficulties that sometimes occurred in collecting taxes, making it necessary for the county officials to borrow in order to make good a deficiency. The purposes for which money was raised in the
